Dr. Adam Tooze

*Professor of History
Yale University*

Adam Tooze teaches all areas of modern German History, twentieth century economic history, social theory and the philosophy of history. He received his first degree in economics from King’s College Cambridge. Between 1989 and 1991 he studied at the Free University Berlin and earned his PhD in economic history from the London School of Economics in 1996. For 13 years he taught in the History Faculty of the University of Cambridge, before joining Yale as Professor of Modern German History in the summer of 2009. He has published several award-winning books, including Wages of Destruction: The Making and Breaking of the Nazi Economy, which won both the Longman and Wolfson prizes, was shortlisted for the Duff Cooper and H Soz Kult prizes, was an Economist book of the year and has been translated into German, Italian, Portuguese and Bulgarian. In Germany, it has been adopted by the Bundeszentrale fuer politische Bildung. Tooze’s current project is a history of the transformation of the global power structure that followed from Imperial Germany’s fateful decision to provoke America’s declaration of war in 1917. World fit for Heroes is due to appear with Penguin in 2012. Concurrently he is pursuing a long-term interest in German-Balkan economic relations and a series of trans-Atlantic meetings on the history of production in the twentieth century.
