The U.K., the E.U. and Iran: Contemporary Problems and Perspectives A Roundtable Featuring Edmund Herzig, Oxford University

Monday, November 19, 2012 | 2:30 PM | FIU Modesto A. Maidique Campus | SIPA 503

Edmund Herzig is Masoumeh and Fereydoon Soudavar Professor of Persian Studies, Oxford University. He has worked on the political and economic history of Iran in the Safavid age and especially on the Armenian merchant community of New Julfa, the Armenian suburb of the capital city, Isfahan. His research interests extend also to the contemporary period, and he has published a number of articles on the foreign and regional relations of the Islamic Republic of Iran. His recent publications include Iran and the World in the Safavid Age (2012, co-edited with Willem Floor), and The Transformation of Tajikistan: The Sources of Statehood (2012, co-edited with John Heathershaw). Before going to Oxford, Dr. Herzig was Senior Lecturer in Persian Studies at the University of Manchester and Senior Research Fellow at the Russia and Eurasia Programme at Chatham House. He completed his DPhil degree in the Faculty of Oriental Studies in Oxford in 1991 and his BA degree in Russian and Persian in Cambridge in 1981.

Co-sponsored by the Miami-Florida European Union Center of Excellence and European Studies Program.
